Hoping for Change? Hope Lives in Your Vote.

Since we all agree that this is the best it can get, let's all do what is necessary to keep it exactly the same. Let's all go to the voting booth or mail-in card this November to make sure nothing about this great country can be challenged as not having been born of how we democratically accept things here. Vote so America stays the same.

Provided for you, the candidates all sound, act, and look the same – the process, the purpose, the results – everything. Signify your seal of approval on the way things are by "participating" in what helps you stay this way: having someone else run your life for you. Oh sure, you may say that elections are a mockery of real democracy, that it conceals a basic flaw in the way we actually live – through inversions of real Power only found at the point of where all real wealth is created – the workplace.

You might say that if it is not direct and democratic, then nothing resulting from that arrangement can be. Okay, that may be true, but until people actually stop giving up variant realities en masse, the possibilities are up for grabs – and, these candidates representing you will keep the decisions where they belong – in the hands of those who've demonstrated their obviously superior knowledge and right to rule: those with whom your inverted social wealth resides – those with money.

For those unwilling to see or be things our way, you're better off contacting other malcontents to discuss generalized self-management, how hope lives so you do not, how leaders are walking-talking receptacles of power actively surrendered, how hyper-complexity, obsolescence, fear, and chaos are maintained to defocus real power and change.
